It was a trip I'll never forget. That Friday dad announced that we were going to visit aunt Emma who lived 600 km from us. I liked her, she baked wonderful cakes, so I was really excited about the trip.

Our travel started fine, but ~~but~~ later something strange happened. The car made a funny sound, roared and stopped. Dad muttered something that I didn't understand and came out.

"What's the matter?" - I asked mom.

"Some problems with car, I guess" - she answered.

It was thundering. How can it be? Aunt Emma is waiting for us, today's her birthday and she is going to bake enormously big cake...

"We aren't going to stay here, are we?" - I said.

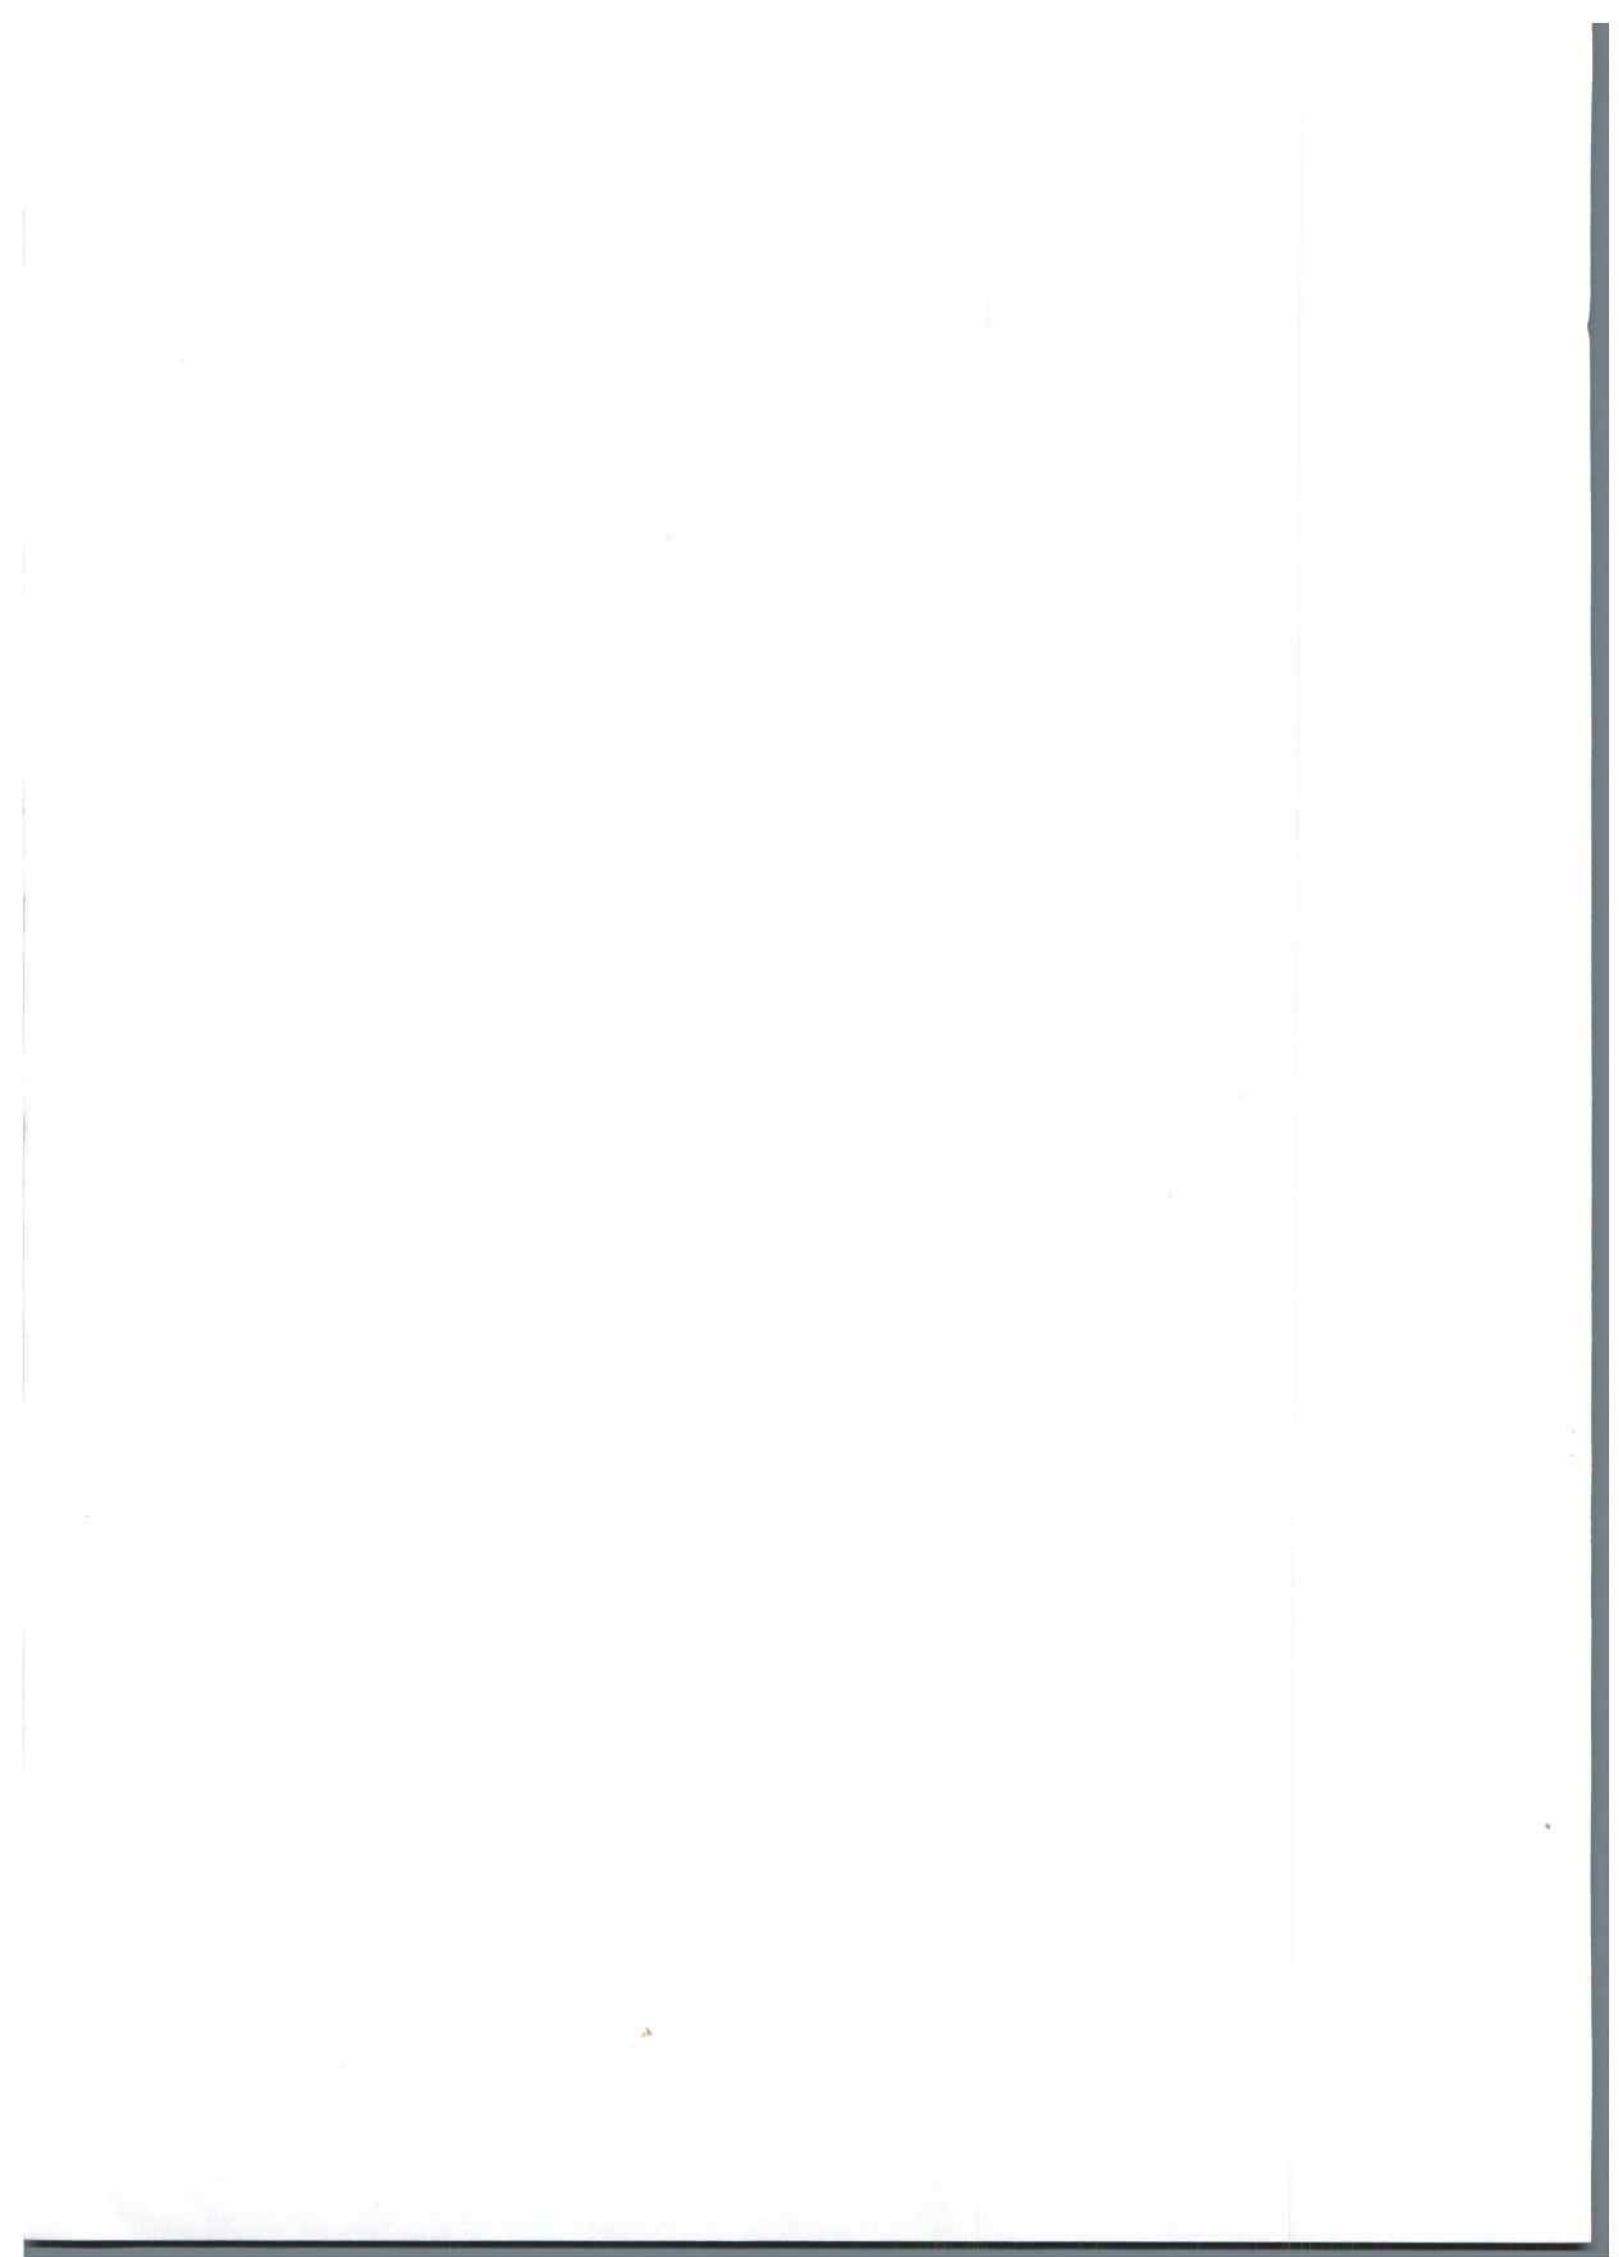

Dad came back. He looked confused.

"I checked the engine, and it wouldn't be too much to say that it is dead. I'm afraid we'll have to spend the night here."

It was a painful strike for me, the holiday which I was dreaming of was falling apart! I burst into tears and occasionally ~~hit~~ hit my head with the car's door.

Few minutes later we all were sitting near the car. Dad was checking my head, I was asking mom was telling me some funny stories to cheer me up. She was tired and freezing and wore a blanket to keep some warmth, but she was here for me, forgetting her troubles to help me with mine. ✓ And I suddenly realised that I don't need aunt Emma and a cake to be happy. I'll always be happy while those who love me are with me.
