It was a trip I'll never forget. Nor will my wife, for that matter. We were both out of the city on a drive into the wild - something we often do, when spending the weekend lounging around in front of the TV doesn't seem like a challenging enough activity.

My ^{1st} one true love, as my wife insists that I call her, was staring out of the window in the car, looking more at her reflection than the „bewildering beauty of nature" as she likes to say.

- Honey Boo!

I turned to her.

- What is it, my one true love?

- There's ^{1st} a little girl over there near the rocks!

I stared at her, confused and worried for her mental health, then proceeded to look out of the window. This was too bizarre to comprehend. There, playing calmly on a bed of clovers, was a girl, not more than six years of ^{1st} age, in an oddly familiar knitted scarf. She seemed ignorant of our presence.

I hastily stopped the car and rushed over to the child. My wife followed suit, her blonde ponytail bobbing up and down as she ran, her grey eyes piercing the girl with a searching and pained expression^{2nd}. I didn't know she possessed.

- Lucy!

The girl turned to look at us.

- Mummy! Daddy!

She cried happily, jumping into our arms, tears and relieved laughter showering us both.

- You forgot me here again last weekend, daddy!

It was a trip I'll never forget. On second thought... I probably would.
