MANKIND'S HERITAGE IS UNDER THREAT

The world has proceeded into the digital age and some of the traditional values, such as art and culture, are gradually losing their significance. Unfortunately, youtube-videos and other types of mediacontent are becoming a substitute for visiting museums and galleries. What does the statistics tell us about this issue?

According to Social Statistic, during 2013 13.7 million people attended five respectively most famous national museums and galleries in England. Surprisingly, by 2015 this number slightly increased and kept on increasing. This tendency resulted in 16.1 million visitors during 2017. Despite the fact this tendency may seem positive at the first sight, it doesn't appeal to specialists: they are concerned about the rate of some museums. No sooner had Natural History museum and Science museum introduced admission charges in 2014 than the quantity of attendants there enormously decreased. As for the 1st museum, quantity of its visitors in 2015 was more than twice less comparing with 2013. As for the 2nd one, the situation is the same. It means that people are not ready to pay for the substantial scientific proofs. They are not really interested in history and science anymore.

Undoubtedly, most of our beliefs and preferences stem from our childhood. I'd would recommend government to popularize science among the youth. As for the museums, they should lessen the tickets' price.

~~The~~ ~~in~~ ~~all~~ ~~the~~ ~~end~~ In conclusion, it's very important to develop the museums and popularize science.
